Software Development Fundamentals (IT5001)

This module aims to introduce non-computing students to the principles and concepts of software development at an accelerated pace. Students will be introduced to the basics of programming (control flow, code and data abstraction, recursion, types, OO), development methodology (ensuring correctness, testing, debugging), simple data structures and algorithms (lists, maps, sorting), and software engineering principles. Through hands on assignments and projects, students will learn good software development practices (documentation, style) and experience a typical software engineering cycle.

Digital Entrepreneurship (IS5116)

The key concepts of entrepreneurship are first covered, giving students the necessary background knowledge and an opportunity to develop a tech startup venture as a team project. Following that, sessions are set aside for students to learn a wide range of issues about entrepreneurship by asking questions and hearing first hand from people who are active in the startup eco-system as entrepreneurs or investors. The student would understand what is involved in building a high tech start-up company and know how to develop an entrepreneurial venture. He would also be familiar with the entrepreneurship eco-system in Singapore.
